

School of Business and Communications

Sacramento High School is organized into five small schools of approximately 350 students. Led by a principal, a counselor, and a team of highly qualified, committed and caring teachers and staff, the small schools create a safe, personalized learning environment where all students are known by name.

Each small school offers a rigorous liberal arts curriculum that provides a full range of college preparatory courses, including Advanced Placement. The program of study is designed to fulfill all state requirements for accreditation and meets the "A-G" requirements for admission into the University of California, California State University and other public and private colleges. Each small school also offers a sequence of electives which emphasize the school theme. This approach offers students challenge, flexibility and choice.

School of Business and Communications

Overview The School of Business and Communications provides students with a challenging academic curriculum as well as the opportunity to study the structures and practices of 21st century corporations, business development and entrepreneurship. Students also have the opportunity to pursue their interests in the field of media and communications.

The School of Business and Communications placed first in California and third in the international Students for the Advancement of Global Entrepreneurship (SAGE) competition. Students also help produce the school yearbook, school newspaper and have their photographs placed in local art galleries. Students are able to learn and experience the exciting world of TV/Radio programming and production. Our students have also been recognized for their outstanding photographs and artistic creativity in some of our Sacramento local art galleries.

Vision To create one of the finest urban high schools in America.

Mission To graduate self-motivated, industrious and critically thinking leaders who are passionate about lifelong learning and committed to serving others.
